

Indicators for Home Health Care

Do you have:

- A new diagnosis of heart failure, COPD, diabetes, or uncontrolled high blood pressure?
- The need for information on how to manage your disease or condition?
- A new medication or change to an existing one?
- Burning or pain when you urinate?
- Joint or back pain?
- Newly ordered oxygen?
- Unexplained weight loss?
- To make frequent trips to the emergency room?

If you checked any of these boxes, home health nursing may be appropriate.

- A hard time getting out of chairs or your bed?
- Difficulty climbing steps?
- Periods of unsteadiness – using furniture or wall to steady yourself?
- Weakness due to a recent surgery?
- New walker, cane, or transfer bench?
- Problems getting dressed or doing your hair due to arm pain or weakness?

If you checked any of these boxes, home health physical therapy may be appropriate.

- Pain when speaking?
- Difficulty with misplacing common objects and remembering appointments?
- Difficulty swallowing, or frequent coughing while eating?
- A problem finding the right words or stuttering?
- People telling you they cannot hear or understand you when you speak?
- Dental challenges: new dentures or losing teeth?

If you checked any of these boxes, home health speech language pathology may be appropriate.
